CALL FOR PAPERS

International Congress: One hundred years of the Russian Revolution. Women, utopia and socio-political practices

26th and 27th October 2017, Sala Buero Vallejo (14.0.11)
Universidad Carlos III (Getafe)

On the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the October Revolution we address and open a call for papers to contribute to the discussion and judgement of the social, political and philosophical impact of those events that bring forth one of the most important phenomena of the 20th century, focusing the discussion on the role and figure of revolutionary women.

Driven by researchers of the Institute of Historiography Caro Baroja and the Institute of Gender Studies at the University Carlos III of Madrid (UC3M), the celebration of this Congress is open to all those interested in:

- Exploring contemporary feminist perspectives from the legacy of the first theoretical communists in gender equality issues.
- The socio-political action of the revolutionary forces.
- Thinking over the relationship between the communist and socialist feminism and the feminist theorists that currently are inspired by this tradition.
- Providing new and problematized readings of canonical texts written by these women.
- Deliberating about new collective strategies and tools for a feminist political praxis.
- Rethinking the relationship between sexual difference and class position of the subjects.
- Marxism, postmarxism and revolution.

The period for proposals will be from 19th June to 14th July to the following email address: revolucionarias1917@gmail.com

A brief summary of the proposal, including Title of the communication and Name of the author (maximum 500 words in Word), should be submitted to the aforementioned email, with the Subject "International Congress: One hundred years from the Russian Revolution and women".
